My utmost gratitude to Allah for giving me the strength to complete this thesis. I would like to extend my gratitude to a number of individuals without whom this thesis would not have been possible. First and foremost, I wish to express my deepest gratitude to my thesis supervisors, Professor Dorothy Kenny and Dr. Iker Erdocia, whose patience, encouragement, guidance and continuous support from the initial to the final level enabled me to complete this thesis. I am very fortunate to have had them as my supervisors. Thank you for the advice, wisdom, and guidance you have given me.

In addition, I would like to thank all the faculty members in the School of Applied Language and Intercultural Studies for their valuable support and help during my studies at DCU. Special thanks also go to all of my research participants in Saudi Arabia. In this regard, I must especially thank my best friend, Dr. Naif Alsaedi, for being such an amazing supportive friend and for always checking on me. Thank you so much for all you have done for me. Abdullah Alhassani, Reem and Summer Alhassani and Claudia Monti, who helped me recruit the participants in my study. Without a doubt, their effort trebled the number of participants and greatly improved the thesis.

Finally, very special thanks go to my parents, especially my mother, Fatima, for her unconditional love and support; to my 3 lovely sisters and my 3 brothers for being there for me whenever I needed them; and to Wasan, my niece, for being my favorite person. Also, I offer my regards and blessings to all of those who supported me in any respect during the completion of the thesis.

Last but not the least, I also owe a huge debt of gratitude to King Abdullah Air Defense Academy for granting me the scholarship to pursue my Ph.D. at Dublin City University.

Productive and Receptive Knowledge and Avoidance of Phrasal Verbs: The Case of Saudi Learners of English

Ahmed Alhassani

Abstract

The present study examines productive and receptive knowledge of PVs among Saudi undergraduates learning English as a Foreign Language (EFL). It uses a mixed-methods approach to elicit two kinds of data: Firstly, 195 Saudi undergraduates in Saudi universities were asked to complete three multiple-choice (MC) tasks designed to assess their productive and receptive skills, and to measure their PV avoidance behavior. The design of the MC tasks was informed by an analysis of a specially-constructed corpus of Saudi EFL textbooks, and taking into account the most frequent PVs in Liu's (2011) corpus-based study, to maximize the likelihood that students were only presented with familiar PVs – those that they have been introduced to as well as 'high-frequency PVs', which many learners at this stage of learning (i.e. undergraduate students) are likely to have encountered, and which they might then either use or avoid. Secondly, data are drawn from a self-built corpus of written compositions, the Saudi Learners of English Corpus (SLEC), comprising over 175,000 words written by 741 Saudi undergraduate EFL students. In both cases, the research attempts to trace the influence of the following variables on learners' use (or avoidance or underuse) of PVs: students' proficiency level (beginner vs. lower intermediate); students' gender; and the semantic type (literal vs. figurative) of the PV in question. In addition, the analysis of the SLEC data investigates the impact of text genre (argumentative vs. narrative vs. descriptive) on learners' use of PVs.

With respect to overall PV frequency, the results of the corpus analysis indicated that there was a relatively low use of PVs in the learners' English production. Furthermore, the results from the MC tasks support those of earlier studies, particularly at the production level. Participants showed better receptive than productive knowledge with an average percentage of correct answers of 72% for the receptive task and 59% for the productive task. In addition, the results for both MC tasks and corpus analysis further suggest that proficiency level, PV type, and text genre play a significant role in Saudi learners' use of PVs, while gender is found to be significant only in the corpus analysis. Meanwhile, proficiency level and PV type had a significant effect on the frequency of PV avoidance.

Standards for the data transcription in the corpus.

1	The texts should be transcribed without any corrections and should remain authentic. No spelling mistakes or errors are corrected.
2	All the metadata variables should be excluded from the text body
3	Any struck-out texts should be discarded
4	If there is a correction above a non-struck out word, the correct form should be transcribed.
5	The teacher's corrections and comments should be excluded
6	When there is a doubtful form of a character which cannot be transcribed, the closer possible form to the correct form is transcribed.
7	Inserting a new line (paragraph) only when it is clear.
8	Any identity information (e.g. learner's name, contacts, postal address, emails, etc.) should be replaced with # (personal information deleted).
9	Any text format, ornamentations, shape, illustration or underlined words or sentences drawn by the learner on the sheet should be excluded
